Eric Hagemeyer, a shareholder and co-chair of Reinhart's Corporate Law Practice, uses his financial background and keen business sense to help clients make crucial strategic decisions. His extensive experience in business and transactional matters allows him to provide insightful counsel on various financial aspects of capital raising, mergers, acquisitions and other corporate transactions. He is also a member of the securities and private equity, venture capital and corporate finance teams. In addition to transactional work, he guides public companies on regulatory compliance and corporate governance, and private companies in compliance with various securities and corporate governance matters.

Before attending law school, Eric worked as a CPA in private industry. This experience gives him a deep understanding of the economic factors that drive sound business decisions. His approach involves out-of-the-box thinking and customized solutions that take business, financial and legal goals into consideration.

Eric sees his role as not only providing clients ideas and options, but also walking alongside them to take matters 'across the finish line.' He is a responsive, collaborative and creative legal partner who values client relationships and the give-and-take connections that bring value to both his practice and their businesses.

He primarily serves clients in the following areas:

- Executive Compensation
- Mergers and Acquisitions
- Private Equity, Venture Capital and Corporate Finance
- Securities
- Corporate Compliance
- Corporate Governance and Investor Relations Services

- Employee Stock Ownership Plans
- Financial Institutions

Away from the office, Eric enjoys mentoring high school students, spending time with his family, traveling, sports and volunteering with his church.
