Hospice Audit Interviews and Conferences Checklist

ACTION	EXPLANATION
Adopt an appropriate mindset	 It is an investigation, not a conversation. The communication strategies on this checklist are not intuitive—be prepared to fight human nature.
Establish credibility and create a favorable impression of the organization.	 Be cordial, polite, and businesslike. Remember, you know your business better than anyone else.
Document interactions with auditors.	 Identify a notetaker who will be present for interviews. Record all questions/answers/statements. Note action items required of hospice or promised by auditors.
Make sure you understand the question.	 Listen to the questions fully. Don't assume you know what they are asking. If you do not understand a question, ask for clarification—"question the questioner."
Satisfy the questioner	 Provide accurate information that is responsive to the question.

ACTION	EXPLANATION
Provide a focused response	 Do not volunteer information that is not responsive. Resist the temptation to "fill the silence" with information that was not requested. Scope of answer should match scope of question—broad/broad; narrow/narrow
Avoid being misinterpreted.	 If questions cannot accurately be answered in one word, provide a sufficient explanation. A response of "Yes, however" can be effective in turning a negative into a positive.
Don't go "out on a limb."	 Understand the limits of your knowledge. "I don't know" is an appropriate response if it is accurate. Do not guess at an answer, even if you would preface the response with "This is just a guess, but" Instead, the appropriate answer is likely "I don't know." Be cautious about offering opinions. Consider whether you are qualified to provide an opinion, especially about medical issues. Consider whether you have enough information to provide an informed opinion.
